Section 60 Stop & Search: Myth vs. Reality

1. True:

Section 60 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 does allow a police officer to stop and search a person without having any specific grounds for suspicion. This means that the officer does not need to have reasonable suspicion to believe the individual is involved in criminal activity.

2. False:

While Section 60 stop and search powers are broad, they cannot be used at any time and in any location. The powers can only be authorized by a senior police officer if they reasonably believe that incidents of serious violence may occur in a particular area or that a person is carrying dangerous weapons. This authorization is usually for a limited period and specified geographic area.

3. True:

Section 60 stop and search powers can only be used if the police believe that serious violence may occur or that a person is carrying dangerous weapons. The authorization is aimed at addressing specific concerns related to public safety and the potential for violence in a given area.

4. True:

Section 60 powers can also be applied to vehicles, allowing the police to stop and search vehicles without the need for reasonable suspicion if the relevant authorization has been given.

5. True:

The use of Section 60 stop and search powers is subject to strict limitations and oversight to prevent abuse. The police must follow specific procedures and justifications when applying these powers. Additionally, the use of Section 60 powers is often subject to scrutiny and review by authorities to ensure compliance with the law and respect for individuals' rights.
